On a seasonably warm Friday evening in Winston-Salem's venerable Southside Park, the homestanding Cardinals, behind the two-hit pitching of lefty Jack Frisinger, take the measure of visiting Reidsville 5-0 in one of four Carolina (D) League games played that day.

At first glance, it seems like just another day of minor league baseball in the Tar Heel State.

After all, Winston-Salem, the league's preseason favorite, currently resides in first place with an impressive 18-7 mark while the fifth-place Luckies drop to 9-12 and a full seven games behind their hosts.

And being shutout by the 20-year-old Frisinger, a rising star in the St. Louis Cardinals farm system, comes as no surprise to Carolina League fans. Said "to be faster than Harvey Haddix," the burgeoning Cardinals ace limits the Luckies to a pair of singles en route to securing the third of an eventual team-high 18 wins. The 6-foot-1 Kalamazoo, Michigan, native strikes out seven and walks three in the route-going effort.

However, several events that take place during the game that are suspicious and, unfortunately, a harbinger of problems to come, both for DeForge and the Carolina League.

First, Winston-Salem officials report to the police there is a person in the stands "making heavy bets," giving Reidsville and two runs which meant that if the Cardinals won by three or more runs, he will win all bets placed.

Barney DeForge
Reidsville Luckies - 1948

In his previous two seasons with Cambridge of the Eastern Shore League (1946) and Natchez of the Evangeline League (1947), the right-handed DeForge walked only 39 batters in 274 innings ... with the Luckies (other than his one inning against Winston-Salem on May 14) DeForge had walked only four in 18 innings of work.

Ed Weingarten

Weingarten is the principal stockholder and general manager of the Florence Steelers of the Tri-State (B) League and president of the Leaksville Triplets of the Blue Ridge (D) League club ... a former general manager of the Carolina League's Greensboro Patriots, Weingarten passes away on June 9 in Greensboro from kidney failure having continually maintained his innocence.

Second, in the bottom of the eighth inning, trailing 2-0 with one man on base, Reidsville manager/pitcher Barney DeForge unexpectedly pulls starting pitcher Tal Abernathy despite the talented lefthander having allowed only seven hits to that point. DeForge, noted for his excellent control, promptly walks the first four batters he faces, and tosses in a wild pitch for good measure, as Winston-Salem tallies three more runs for a comfortable (and profitable) 5-0 win.

Third, after the game is over, several disgruntled fans come out the stands and gather around the Reidsville dugout, yelling at the players and accusing them of "laying down." The following evening, the Winston-Salem management hires plain clothes policemen to keep watch for the reported gambler, but he fails to show.

Within a matter of days, events would soon transpire that will rock the Carolina League to its core.

Gambling was reported to be heavy at Southside Side Park the previous year and club authorities thought they had it "suppressed," but reports of large sums of money being wagered that Friday night prove to be sadly accurate and the person at the very epicenter of the brewing maelstrom is Reidsville manager Barney DeForge.

Barney DeForge [2 of 6]:

With the stories of a "betting coup" in circulating in Winston-Salem and around the Carolina League, George M. Trautman, president of Professional baseball Leagues has DeForge and Reidsville Business Manager Phil Lundeen meet with him on May 18, in Columbus, Ohio.

George M. Trautman

A former president of the American Association for 10 years (1936-1945) and General Manager of the Detroit Tigers for two (1946-47), Trautman is named President of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, succeeding William Bramham. Trautman holds that position from 1947 until his death in 1963. A three-sport letter winner at Ohio State in football, basketball and baseball, Trautman is the school's head basketball coach for three seasons (1920-1922) compiling a 29-33 record, including a 10-26 mark in Big Ten league play.

On May 22, DeForge is on the mound in the first game of a doubleheader with the Burlington Bees, when in the second inning he is handed a telegram from Trautman informing him of his suspension.

DeForge leaves the game, his baseball career likely over and his future in doubt.

On June 1st, DeForge becomes the first North Carolinian since Homer Triplett in 1946 to be placed on the permanently ineligible list of Organized Baseball.

In addition to DeForge, Trautman also suspends Ed Weingarten, the principal stockholder and general manager of the Florence club of the Tri-State League and president of the Leaksville Blue Ridge League club, for his involvement in the plan.

Trautman also rules that the game of May 14 be replayed from the "point of misconduct," or as close as possible to the game situation at the end of seven and one-half innings of play.

Trautman also reveals that DeForge admitted to throwing the game in Winston-Salem for $300. DeForge says that Weingarten and W.C. McWaters, a used car dealer in Clover, South Carolina, were involved in the arrangement. Weingarten, who was also at the hearing, denies any involvement.

Twenty-four hours later, on June 2, DeForge and Weingarten are arrested by Winston-Salem police on charges of bribery in connection with "throwing" the game. DeForge is released that night on a $1,000 bond, while Weingarten posts his $2,500 bond a day later.

Police Chief John Gold says DeForge is arrested under a statute prohibiting the acceptance of bribes by players, umpires, and club officials. Violation calls for a penitentiary sentence from one to five years.

Weingarten denies he had any part in the game fixing and that he will appeal Trautman's ruling.

Both DeForge and Weingarten are ordered for a hearing on July 7 on the charges. However, before the scheduled court appearance, Weingarten enters St. Leo's Hospital in Greensboro on July 5, for treatment of a blocked kidney. Four days later, on June 9, Weingarten passes away.

DeForge says that after he walked the first batter, "I was so unnerved and upset that I didn't know what I was doing after that. I didn't really want to go on, and I was afraid not to go through with it."

On October 21, DeForge pleads guilty and is sentenced to one year in prison. Two Clover, South Carolina, used car dealers are acquitted. Five days later, saying that "Organized Baseball would not be helped by sending the convicted man to prison," Judge Allen Gwynn, after 30-minute hearing with several law enforcement officers, including former major league pitcher and current Forsyth County Sheriff Ernie Shore, suspends the one-year prison term he had given out earlier to DeForge.

Gwynn puts DeForge on probation for five years and urges him, "to rise above what has come out of this."

Belvedere Hotel, Reidsville, N.C.

Opened on July 1, 1922, the Belvedere Hotel in Reidsville, North Carolina, is the site of the May 10 meeting between DeForge, Ed Weingarten and W.C. McWaters where a plan to "make a lot of money out of betting on baseball games" is conceived ... Weingarten is the principal stockholder and general manager of the Florence Steelers of the Tri-State League as well as the president of the Leaksville franchise of the Blue Ridge League while McWaters is a used car salesman and professional gambler.

Hooper Triplett Columbus Red Birds - 1940

On August 11, 1946, 26-year-old Columbus Cardinal outfielder Hooper Triplett becomes the first North Carolinian to be suspended from baseball for gambling ... the Triplett, North Carolina, native is fined $500 and suspended by the South Atlantic League for betting $20 against his team ... 10 days later, the National Association makes the ban permanent.

Barney DeForge is 18 years old when his mother Marie is murdered by his father George. Following the shooting, DeForge, a former Jersey City policeman, simply walks into the city's police headquarters and gives himself up, admitting that he had just shot his wife to death while wounding his son Francis, his daughter Grace and her husband.

EX-POLICEMAN IS HELD FOR MURDER

Surrenders After Killing His Wife and Shooting Four Others

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 2 (AP)—George De Forge, former Jersey City policeman who allegedly killed his wife and critically wounded four other persons, was ordered held without bail today on a charge of murder.

Judge Anthony Botti, who presided at the arraignment in the First Criminal Court, postponed De Forge's hearing until next Saturday pending the outcome of the injuries of the wounded. Three of the four persons were on the "danger list" at the Medical Center.

De Forge, police said, surrendered at headquarters last night and calmly admitted shooting his wife, Marie, to death and wounding his son, Francis; his daughter, Mrs. Grace Deveney; her husband, James and their guest, Fred Messenbach.

The motive for the shooting was not revealed by the authorities. De Forge will be arraigned before Judge Anthony Botti in First Criminal Court.

The wounded were taken to the Medical Center where emergency operations were performed early today.

DeForge walked into police headquarters after the shooting, greeted Desk Sergeant Frank Merrigan cordially and then laid a revolver on the desk.

"Well, I guess you can't make any honorable mention out of this," Sergt. Merrigan quoted him as saying.

The sergeant said he then told of shooting his wife and the others.

The police said De Forge shot his wife in her home at 228 Dwight street, and then wounded his son. They said he next went to his daughters home at 50 Jackson street and shot the others.
