Versatile and accomplished are two adjectives to aptly describe Charles W. "Chick" Doak's successful dual career of baseball and coaching. For a 40-year period from the turn of the century to start of America's involvement in World War II, Doak was not only one of the more popular sports figures in the state of North Carolina, but possibly one of the most influential.

Born on October 7, 1884, the only child to James Doak, a former colonel in the Confederate Army during the Civil War, young Charles is a five-sport athlete at tiny Guilford College just outside Greensboro, North Carolina (five miles in 1910). He plays 11 seasons (yes 11) on the college's baseball team from 1900 to 1911 (except for 1905) thus earning the moniker "Grandfather" by the Greensboro Daily News in recognition of his campus longevity.

His collegiate athletic career starts as a 15-year-old in 1900, when he enrolls in a public grade school that the college provides and it's evident that Doak was already talented enough to start at third base. Without a high school in his area - most of the high schools in that era are located in the state's larger cities - Doak elects to attend a preparatory school at Guilford from 1904 through 1907. Finally, after four more years of college, Doak earns his degree in 1911.

Doak makes a seamless transition from college ball to the pros. In seven seasons with his hometown Greensboro Patriots and two with the Charlotte Hornets, the affable infielder was known state-wide for his competitiveness and sense of fair play.

While playing professional baseball during the summers, Doak also begins a lengthy coaching career. In time, he is not only serves as the baseball coach at his alma mater, but also at the University of North Carolina, North Carolina A&M (now N.C. State) and Trinity College (now Duke University).

In addition, he is the only person ever be named the head basketball coach at both Duke and the University of North Carolina.

Doak oversees North Carolina State College's baseball program from 1924 to 1939 and is 145-131-6 (.535) in 16 seasons, which includes a pair of South Atlantic Championships in 1924 and 1928. In his first season in Raleigh he directs the Wolfpack to the state title with an 18-4 mark and is presented with a automobile by appreciative students and faculty.

In 1915, North Carolina hires Doak to replace Nat Cartmell as the Tar Heels' basketball coach after Cartmell, who was the school's first ever basketball coach, is fired in April for playing dice with students on campus. Following a 12-6 mark in 1915-16, Doak steps down as head coach and is replaced by Howell Peacock.

Chick Doak [2 of 9]:

Doak enters the professional ranks as a 20-year-old in 1905, following Earl Holt, his Guilford coach to the Salisbury-Spencer franchise of the D-level Virginia-North Carolina League. Two weeks into the season, he leaves the team to sign with the Greensboro Farmers, where in addition to being the team's starting third baseman, he takes several turns on the mound, finishing with a 3-2 mark.

After a successful 1906 season at Guilford, Doak elects to play for the semipro Bingham Cadets in Asheville and then with the Emporia (Va.) Invincibles, a strong independent team that will win 40 of 47 games. He returns to the Commonwealth in 1907 for a second straight year, when he suits up for the Pulaski Tigers. Doak begins his pro career in earnest in 1908, signing with the hometown Greensboro Patriots. Playing second, third, shortstop and both corner outfield positions, he hits an even .200 and leads the team in sacrifice hits with 23 as the Patriots edge the Greenville Spinners by a half-game for the first of two-straight Carolina League titles. Returning to the Patriots in 1909, he once again is the team's primary utility man, stealing a career-high 21 bases and improving his batting average 20 points to .220 as James McKeitt's Patriots win their second-straight Carolina League pennant by three games over the Anderson Electronics.

Chick Doak [3 of 9]:

In 1910, Doak is back at Guilford for a 10th year and he is named captain of the Quaker nine for a second-straight year. Unable to join Greensboro until May 31, Doak makes "fans rejoice" when he is 2-for-4 in his season debut with two RBIs in a 6-0 win over Greenville. In 86 games for the last place Champs, he hits .248 and steals 15 bases and during a change in managers he even manages the team to a 2-2 record.

YMCA Controversary

On December 11, 1909, the Charlotte YMCA schedules a basketball game with Guilford College. Both Guilford and the YMCA field talented teams with both squads having previously defeated Trinity College. However, since the YMCA is permitted to play only amateur teams there is "considerable doubt" that the two teams can play as the previous year when the teams played, it was alleged that Charles Doak, a professional baseball player played for Guilford. Guilford manager I.W. Stewart assures the YMCA that was not the case and has a letter from Guilford College President Hobbs that every player is a bona fide student of the college. However, the game is cancelled when a father of one of Guilford's players dies unexpectedly.

Chick Doak
1908 Greensboro Patriots

Doak's seemingly inexhaustible college eligibility continues in 1911 as he returns to Guilford and stars on both the school's basketball and baseball teams before accepting his diploma in May. His tenure with the Quakers is so extensive that several of the local newspapers now refer to him as "Grandfather" Doak." Back with the Greensboro Patriots for a fourth-straight year, Doak plays in 100 games for the first time in his pro career and hits a solid .256 as the Patriots improve by 20 1/2 games under manager Frank Doyle to a second-place finish.

Having finally completed his eligibility at Guilford, Doak is named to coach the school's baseball team for the 1912 season where is 8-3. Switching uniforms, he is back in Greensboro where he hits .253 while playing in every game at seven different positions. He is third on the team with 105 hits.

After directing the Quaker baseball team to a 13-1-1 record and a claim to the mythical state title, Doak returns to Greensboro in 1913 for what will be his final full season. He achieves career-highs in at bats (432), hits (123), doubles (27), total bases (155), slugging percentage (.359) and batting average (.285) for the last-place Patriots. Despite the Patriots' achievements, or lack thereof, Doak always considered 1913 finest season. His 27 doubles ranked third among North Carolina State League leaders while his batting average was ninth.

On June 4, the Patriots are in last place with a 13-22 mark when Doak replaces the popular Frank Doyle as the team's manager. On June 22, Doyle "withdraws" his resignation and resumes team managerial duties for the remainder of the season. The Patriots are 5-9 under Doak, who after the season ends is put in charge of athletics at Guilford College.

1914 proves to be a pivotal year for the 29-year-old Doak. Starting his seventh-straight season in Greensboro, Doak is hitting .233 with seven doubles, three triples and one home run as the team's everyday third baseman, when on August 5, he and fellow Guilford alum Bill Futrell, a backup catcher, are traded to the Charlotte Hornets for first baseman Harry "Chief" McCall. With the addition of Doak, the Hornets' starting infield is dubbed the "Managerial Quartet" as Doak, first baseman Doug Harbison, second baseman Red Owens and manager/shortstop Bert Emery have all had managerial experience. After hitting .286 in 28 games with the "Insects" Doak finishes the season with a .245 batting average and 19 stolen bases and leads all third baseman in fielding (.941).

Chick Doak [4 of 9]:

After the baseball season is completed, Doak accepts an offer from the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill to coach the school's baseball in 1915. In December, in addition to his baseball duties, he becomes only the second basketball coach in UNC history, when he replaces Nathaniel Cartmell, who was forced to resign back in April after being caught gambling with students on campus. He directs the hoops team to a 6-10 mark while the baseball team finishes 12-4.

Doak returns to Charlotte for the 1915 season, in what will be his final campaign as an every day starting player in the North Carolina State League. Now the oldest player in the league but considered by many the most conscientious, he hits a pedestrian .219, his lowest batting average in seven years. That January, while coaching the basketball team to a 12-6, Doak is being mentioned as the probable choice to be the school's first-ever athletic director. The Greensboro Daily News notes that a system similar, if not identical to that in vogue at the University of Virginia will be given a trial just as soon as the UNC Alumni Association (which effectively controls the athletic department) would "get out from under" so that a director of athletics could be employed. Doak also begins his second season as UNC's baseball coach with 75 prospective players attending the first week of practice.

In the second game of a South Atlantic League doubleheader Charles "Chick" Doak plays in his final game as a pro baseball player. Starting at second for the Charleston Sea Gulls, the 31-year-old Greensboro native is 1-for-2 with a run scored and a sacrifice as the Gulls take the measure of the visiting Jacksonville Tarpons by 9-4. In the first game, a 7-1 Charleston victory, he is 2-for-4 with a stolen base and a run scored and collects his 780th and last hit off of the Tarpons' Jim Manes.

A free agent following his disappointing tenure with Charlotte the year before, Doak gets back into pro ball in 1916 signing with Greensboro on May 1 and replacing Bob Schuyler as the team's starting third baseman. His stay with the last-place Patriots is brief when he draws his release on May 7 to make room for Gordon McDuff, recently acquired from Charlotte. One month later, on June 7, Doak signs with the Winston-Salem Twins and is named the team's starting shortstop. After collecting only two hits in 23 at bats (.087) for the Twins and making five errors in seven games, he earns his second release of the season on June 21.

In 1917, Doak signs to play baseball outside the state of North Carolina for the first time, inking a contract with the Albany (Ga.) Babies of the South Atlantic (C) League. He makes his Babies' debut on May 23 and in a brief 10-game trial he hits .257, but shaky fielding once again seals his fate and he is released following a two-error game on June 2. Doak signs with the Montgomery Rebels on July 13, but 10 days later, the Albany Babies "give up the ghost," and disbands. In an effort to keep league membership at even number, the league drops Montgomery from the "roll call," and Doak is one of four Rebel players assigned to the Charleston Senators where on the final day of the season, and his career, the venerable one collects the 780th and last hit of his career.

Doak Field 1994

After leaving Duke in the spring of 1920, he and his brother-in-law Ben Renfrow buy and run a store in Raleigh until he is hired to coach the N.C. State freshman baseball team in 1923. Doak then serves as the head baseball coach and teacher at the school for 34 years.

Chick Doak [5 of 9]:

Doak dies of a heart attack on April 21, 1956, at his home in Raleigh at the age of 71, 10 months after retiring from his N.C. State physical education teaching position in July 1958.

DOAK CHRONOLOGY

April 21, 1905

Doak has two hits in Guilford's 6-4 win over Wake Forest College.

June 28, 1905

In his debut with the Greensboro Farmers of the Virginia-North Carolina (D) League, Doak plays an errorless game at shortstop in a 5-4 loss to the Danville Tobacconists ... prior to the game, Farmers' manager Jack Grim releases veteran catcher Victor Accorsini to make room for Doak.

Earl Holt

A graduate of Oak Ridge Academy and the University of North Carolina, Earl Holt was chief scout in the South for the Cleveland Indians for 20 years. A star baseball and football player at UNC despite fracturing his leg in 1903, he manages the Wilson team of the Carolina league several years in the early 1900s. Holt has a hand in guiding many baseball prospects into the pro ranks, including Wes Ferrell, Jackie May, Dixie Davis, Ray Hayworth, Bryon "Red" Hayworth, Maurice Burrus, Chubby Dean, Al Evans, Max Wilson, Glen Levan, Lee "Pat" Frye, Don-nie Montgomery, and Buck Overton.

August 19, 1905

Greensboro suspends pitcher Peyton Charters after Farmers' manager Zeke Wilson accuses the noted Richmond, Virginia, spitballer of trying to throw games ... on October 8, 1908, Charters passes away in his hometown two weeks before his 27th birthday following a short illness.

August 21, 1905

The Carolina-Virginia League disbands ... Earle Holt's Winston-Salem Orphans, homeless since Winston-Salem disowns the team three weeks earlier, pull out of the league and as a consequence, the league disbands as the other three cities in the circuit find it impossible to support their own teams and the Orphans also.

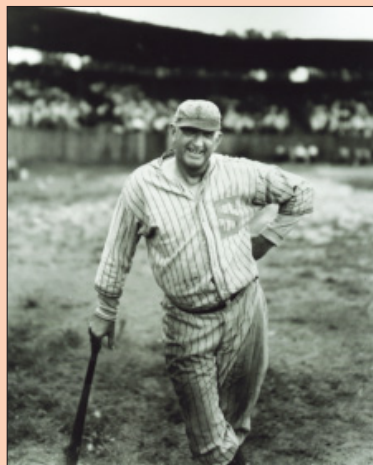

April 28, 1908

After starting at third base for Guilford College in a 6-1 loss to Wake Forest, Doak signs with the Greensboro Champs of the Carolina (D) Association.

April 29, 1908

For the first time Greensboro players will appear in neat white flannel suits with red caps and belts, and they will present a "very natty" appearance upon the field.

May 1, 1908

Doak makes his 1908 Greensboro debut, starting at third base ... batting second in the order he is 0-for-4 with a run scored in a 5-4 win over Winston ... handled four chances without an error in the 10-inning affair ... Walter Hammersley picks up the first of 22 wins on the season.

◀ August 10, 1908

In the second-to-last day of the regular season, both Doak and Greenville's Shoeless Joe Jackson (left) are 0-for-4 as the Patriots beat the visiting Spinners 1-0, on a five-hit shutout by lefty Tony Walters.

Robert "Kid" Anderson, Trinity College

On May 29, 1918, Robert B. "Kid" Anderson is the first Trinity College alumnus killed in action in World War I. Part of the American Expeditionary Force, First Lieutenant Anderson is among the first group of American soldiers to see action in Europe. He is killed at the Battle of Cantigny in France - the first major American engagement of the war. A native of Wilson, North Carolina, Anderson was a four-year letterman on the college's baseball team and earned All-Southern honors in 1912 after hitting .309 and stealing 17 bases.

Chick Doak [6 of 9]:

August 11, 1908

With 3,000 spectators lining the field at Cone Park, Greensboro clinches the Carolina League pennant splitting a doubleheader with Greenville. The Spinners win the first game 5-2, but the homestanding Patriots claim the afternoon affair 6-5.

April 1, 1909

Doak hits a rare home run as Guilford beats Davidson 7-3 in Charlotte ... future major leaguer Jack Ridgeway pitches a six-hitter for Guilford.

April 21, 1909

Doak steals home for Guilford's only run in a 4-1 loss to the University of North Carolina.

August 31, 1909

In the first game of a best-of-seven post-season series between Greensboro, champion of the Carolina League and the Wilmington Sailors, winners of the East Carolina League, Doak's single in the top of the 10th inning drives in the game's lone run ... the Sailors will eventually win the series four games to two.

Summary:

Doak and Stewart starred.

Wild pitch—Robertson 1.

Two base hits—Hartsell, Benbow.

Sacrifice hit—Seifert.

Strike outs—by Robertson 12; Shore 4.

Doak is 0-for-4 but handles eight chances flawlessly at shortstop in Guilford's 3-1 win over visiting North Carolina A&M (now N.C. State). The game features two future major leaguers on the mound - Guilford right-hander Ernie Shore and A&M lefty David Robertson. Shore allows seven hits and strikes out four while Robertson, who will have a nine-year major league career as an outfielder and lead the NL twice in home runs (1916 & 1917), strikes out 12 while yielding only five safeties.

Duke Wins over State by Forfeit TECHS PENALIZED FOR QUEER ANTICS

April 17, 1935 - In an extra inning game against arch-rival Duke, Chick Doak's reputation for sportsmanship takes a hit for his team's "lack of decorum" on a field bearing his name. After the Blue Devils had taken a 11-7 lead in the 10th inning, Wolfpack players, under instructions from their head coach, begin throwing the baseball all over the field. Over a 10-minute span the State pitcher threw only three pitches to Sammy Bell, the Blue Devil batter. Morgan, the game umpire finally had enough and forfeited the game to Duke by a 9-0 score. After the game Doak takes full responsibility for the forfeit. "I guess I'm to blame and I'm willing to take the blame. After Duke had scored four runs I told the boys to stall for time but I didn't know their idea of stalling would be to turn things into such a farce."

which he is manager. Chick went to the hill after the Greenies had chased a couple of youngsters, Andreoll and Bugg, and he did much better than they had been able to do. The State College coach allowed only one run in the last five innings."

April 10, 1938 ▶

Connie Berry, a three-sport star at N.C. State, officially withdraws from the college, according to Romeo Lefort, the Assistant Dean of Men ... Berry has accepted a position with a midwestern sporting goods firm with its headquarters in Chicago ... Berry made contact with the firm on a recent trip to Denver, while playing with the Unique Quintet of Winston-Salem in the National AAU basketball tournament ... Berry was counted on to take a regular turn on the mound this spring ... Lefort says there remains a "remote" possibility of Berry's returning to school in time, to become eligible for the baseball team ... Berry would eventually play professional basketball and football and minor league baseball.
