

Born on November 1, 1906, Warren "Pete" Rambo makes his only major league appearance for the Philadelphia Phillies on September 16, 1926, as the fifth of six pitchers in a 23-3 loss to the eventual National League champion St. Louis Cardinals in the first game of a late season twin bill.

RAMBO BREAKS INTO PHILLIES' LINEUP

Warren Rambo, youthful hurler who was with Cumberland this season, returning to the Philadelphia Nationals at the conclusion of the Mid-Atlantic schedule, got into the Phillies' lineup yesterday in the first game against St. Louis and went down with the other four hurlers who were banged by the Cardinal swatsmiths. Rambo stopped the twelve-run rally in the third, got by the fourth without a score, but was hit hard in the fifth and sixth when he gave way to Taber.

The Cardinals' eventual double-header sweep of the last-place Phillies before an estimated crowd of 8,000 in the Baker Bowl enables Roger Hornsby's Redbirds to move into a virtual tie for first place with the Cincinnati Reds.

Leading 2-1 after two innings, the Cardinals batter five Phillies pitchers (including Rambo) to push across a team record 12 runs on nine hits and two errors in the third. Starting pitcher Jack Knight and relievers Mike Kelly, Ed Baecht and Ray Pierce were each "battered from the box" before Rambo succeeds in getting the final two outs.

Rambo, a 19-year-old right hander from Thorofare, New Jersey, pitches 3 2/3 innings against the rampaging Redbirds that afternoon, allowing eight runs on six hits and four walks in the lone appearance of his brief major league career.

On January 28, 1927, the Phillies announce that left-handed pitcher Warren D. Rambo has been turned over to the Wilkes-Barre Barons of the New York-Penn League.
