Fresh off the campus of Herbert Hoover High School, 17-year-old Theodore Samuel "Ted" Williams, makes his professional baseball debut with his hometown San Diego Padres of the Pacific Coast (AA) League. Pinch-hitting for starting pitcher Jack Hile, Williams strikes out against Sacramento's 16-game winner Cotton Phippen in the second inning of a 7-6 win over the visiting Senators.

For the 21-year-old Hile, his start against the Salons marks the final appearance of a less-than-successful three-year minor league career. Spending time with the Hollywood Stars (1934-35) and the Padres (1936), the Long Beach product is 2-14 in 63 career appearances.

Up the road in San Francisco, the first-place Oakland Oaks pound out 30 hits en route to a 27-6 win over the Mission Reds. Oakland's rookie shortstop Joe Gordon drives in five runs with two singles, a triple and a home run while 25-year-old right fielder Jack Glynn has seven RBIs on three hits. A veteran of seven minor league seasons, Glynn retires after the 1940 season to become a player-manager of the Franklin Athletic Club in New Jersey's Inter-County semipro league. Glynn studied for Catholic priesthood during his playing career and never was known to swear.
